

ARTS 2011 SHINES THROUGH THE WEEKEND AT GEORGETOWN PARK

GeorgetownDish.com

January 28, 2011

by Leslie Kamrad

literally figurative

It's cold. It's dreary. It's January. But Thursday night's opening reception for Georgetown ARTS 2011 featuring 30 local artists brought a hint of spring when I saw Edward "Bear" Miller's oil painting of the undulating arches of Key Bridge. My mind wandered to the joys of kayaking on the Potomac and warmer weather that surely must be coming... isn't spring only eight weeks away?

Other treats were Karen Feld's "Contemplation" which reminded me that winter is a quiet waiting time to ponder the green surge of new growth that accompanies the season of spring.

Georgetown ARTS 2011 show is located in The Shops at Georgetown Park through Tuesday Feb. 1, 2011. To get there enter at the west end of Level Two at 3222 M Street (closest to Dean & Deluca), take the escalator down one level, and the show is immediately on the right (one level above the DMV office and one level below Victoria's Secret).

Paintings by Georgetown artists hint of spring and bright days

Artist: Karen Feld, Title: Contemplation, Medium: Terra Cotta